Due to the ongoing impact of the global pandemic we have had to evaluate all of our courses to ensure that we adhere to Government guidelines to protect the health and wellbeing of our staff and students. This means that as we work through these changes the format, delivery methods and assessments for the modules below are subject to change. Students will be informed directly regarding the delivery and assessment methods for their programmes in 2020/21 and beyond and the final versions of the module specifications will be updated in due course.

The way you divide your time will depend on your own working patterns. It is difficult to quantify the time it takes to learn, but the convention in the world of higher education is that one credit is earned for each ten hours worked. This comes close to a 35 hour week in term time, so you can expect to be working for up to ten hours per week per module outside of class.

In the teaching semesters, you might find it useful to spend roughly the suggested amount of time on each of these activities:
- Seminar preparation (e.g. reading and taking notes on set texts and wider reading, or drafting/redrafting a text; participating in Autonomous Learning Groups; preparing presentations): 72 hours
- Research, reading and writing your assessments: 56 hours

Intended Learning Outcomes
On successful completion of the module, students should be able to:
- Identify a range of recognisable literary figures in North American literature
- Analyse literary texts in relation to these literary figures
- Connect the figures discussed in this module to those encountered in previous literature modules
- Critically consider the complexity of periodisation and challenges to generic categorisation
- Develop their own arguments through formatively and summatively assessed work

Teaching and Learning Methods
This module is delivered through weekly two-hour workshops which will allow students to build on and hone skills acquired from taking either foundational skills modules AM1002 or EN1010. In workshops, students collaboratively consider the historical and cultural contexts for the texts under discussion as well as having the opportunity to focus closely on the literary and cinematic texts. Students are required to work on a range of literary texts selected from a variety of literary periods and forms within North American literary and cultural studies. Students will have the opportunity to deliver a short informal presentation on a text of their choice once over the course of the semester. This will offer students practice in clearly formulating and presenting an argument and students will receive formative feedback on their presentation from the tutor, as well as peer feedback. This formative feedback will help them prepare for their final 2,500-word portfolio. Students will have the chance to discuss their writing style, critical approach and argument in detail with their tutor each week, either during dedicated module office hours or during the workshop.

Intended Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of the module, students should be able to:
- Discuss a range of protest texts in North America
- Consider how literature can function as protest
- Explore and evaluate the changing contexts and interpretations of protest in North America
- Understand and respond to current debates in protest literature, reader studies, and theories of reading
- Developed their own arguments through formatively and summatively assessed work

Teaching and Learning Methods

This module is taught through two-hour weekly seminars, and students will engage with literary and cultural texts through set reading and structured tasks as well as by preparing self-generated weekly seminar questions in the form of mini presentations to discuss in each session. Each session will focus on one or two specific themes through which to analyse the literary and cultural material. In preparation for the essay, students will have the opportunity to submit a detailed essay plan or page-long draft for formative feedback from the tutor and from peers.

Guided Independent Study: Indicative Activities

University students are expected to engage in independent study in order to develop their knowledge and skills. The pedagogy of university English has throughout its history been centred on students’ independent reading of literary texts before scheduled teaching events, such as seminars and lectures. While each student will approach this work differently, independent study is guided by the publication of learning outcomes, assessment criteria, seminar schedules and reading lists. Further scaffolding for independent study may be provided, where appropriate, by seminar tutors in advance of seminars, by Autonomous Learning Groups, by dissertation supervisors and by personal tutors, who will advise on your academic development across your programme of study. Additionally, students are expected to make use of feedback on their assessments to develop their approach to their studies, and encouraged to discuss their work with their peers outside as well as in seminars.

The way you divide your time will depend on your own working patterns and vary according to the time of year. It is difficult to quantify the time it takes to learn, but the convention in the world of higher education is that one credit is earned for each ten hours worked. This comes close to a 35 hour week in term time, so you can expect to be working for up to ten hours per week per module outside of class.

The advice below will vary depending on the requirements of each module. On literature modules you may spend a large part of your time reading the primary texts; on Language and Creative Writing modules, the primary tasks will be different, for instance drafting or revising a written text on a Creative Writing course; in English Language assignments, you may be required to spend some time on ethically collecting data for analysis. Below is a rough guide:

In the teaching semesters, you might find it useful to spend roughly the suggested amount of time on each of these activities:
- Seminar preparation (e.g. reading and taking notes on set texts and wider reading, or drafting/redrafting a text; participating in ALGs; preparing presentations): 60%
- Research, reading and writing your assessments: 40% (more if you have an assessment due in mid term).

In the Winter and Easter vacations, during the time you have available, you might expect to spend roughly the suggested amount of time on each of these activities:
- Reading, researching, planning and writing your assessments: 80%
- Reading ahead for next semester’s modules: 20%

In the Summer vacation, you should try to set time aside for reading ahead and planning for the coming semester.
